As a result of information provided by Patrick McGroder, Det MALONE made a number of enquiries in order to locate and contact former detective Leslie PEET who worked in Moree in the early 80's. PEET informed Det MALONE that he was in Moree for 10 years as a detective from 1965 to 1975, he was a detective for 27 years and has been retired from the NSW Police Force for 13 years.

PEET has a vague recollection/memory of John FARRELL. He does remember Monsignor Ryan and said that he was a really nice bloke, remembers a priest by the name of Hanna who he says is now the Bishop in Wagga. He remembers two other priests but can't remember their names. PEET does not recall any allegations regarding FARRELL in the time he was working in Moree. He was asked about Patrick McGroder, to which he remembered his father who had the same name and owned the local shoe shop. He remembered that he had a son by the same name who went away and join the police force. He also has a vague recollection that [REDACTED] This he could not elaborate on. He doesn't recall any complaint made by Patrick McGroder (junior) in regards to FARRELL. He doesn't recall any talk or rumours around the town in ragrds to FARRELL. He has not kept any old duty books, day books, notebooks or cases. He informed Det MALONE that he is close friends with a Jabour HADDAD who is approximately 80 years of age and living [REDACTED]. Jabour is the uncle of Bradley HADDAD. PEET states that Jabour was really tight with the church back in the day and may have some usefullful information. PEET remembers a comment made by one of the priest (unknown) to him saying; "Watch out for that one! He hangs out with the aboriginals."
