Dear

REDACTED

What the postman delivered to me from you could well have come from 'a woman scorned'; one suffering the personal traumas of menopause; a person in alcoholic stupor to dull paranoid suspicions born of frustration following on a celibate life, lived, in accordance with the admonition of Christ & His Church; or, at worst, one with a luna-tic, influenced by full moons & to lesser degree as it is more partial.

Your accusations are as cruel as unreal. You have said as much before. Were I to make Mary Clare & her husband privy to your crazy letters, they might be inclined to break you by legal process. I will not do so.

Dear Pat, please do not ever write or phone me again. That letter, your second written in such terms, must be your last. It is with regret that I part from one who was admired & esteemed. I will not relent in this decision without proof that you were insane at the time of writing.

Thank you for friendship, solicitude & much care of me over many years.

You leave me sad, hurt, & ashamed for you, whilst I have lost a friend.

Donna P. Pile
