

REDACTED

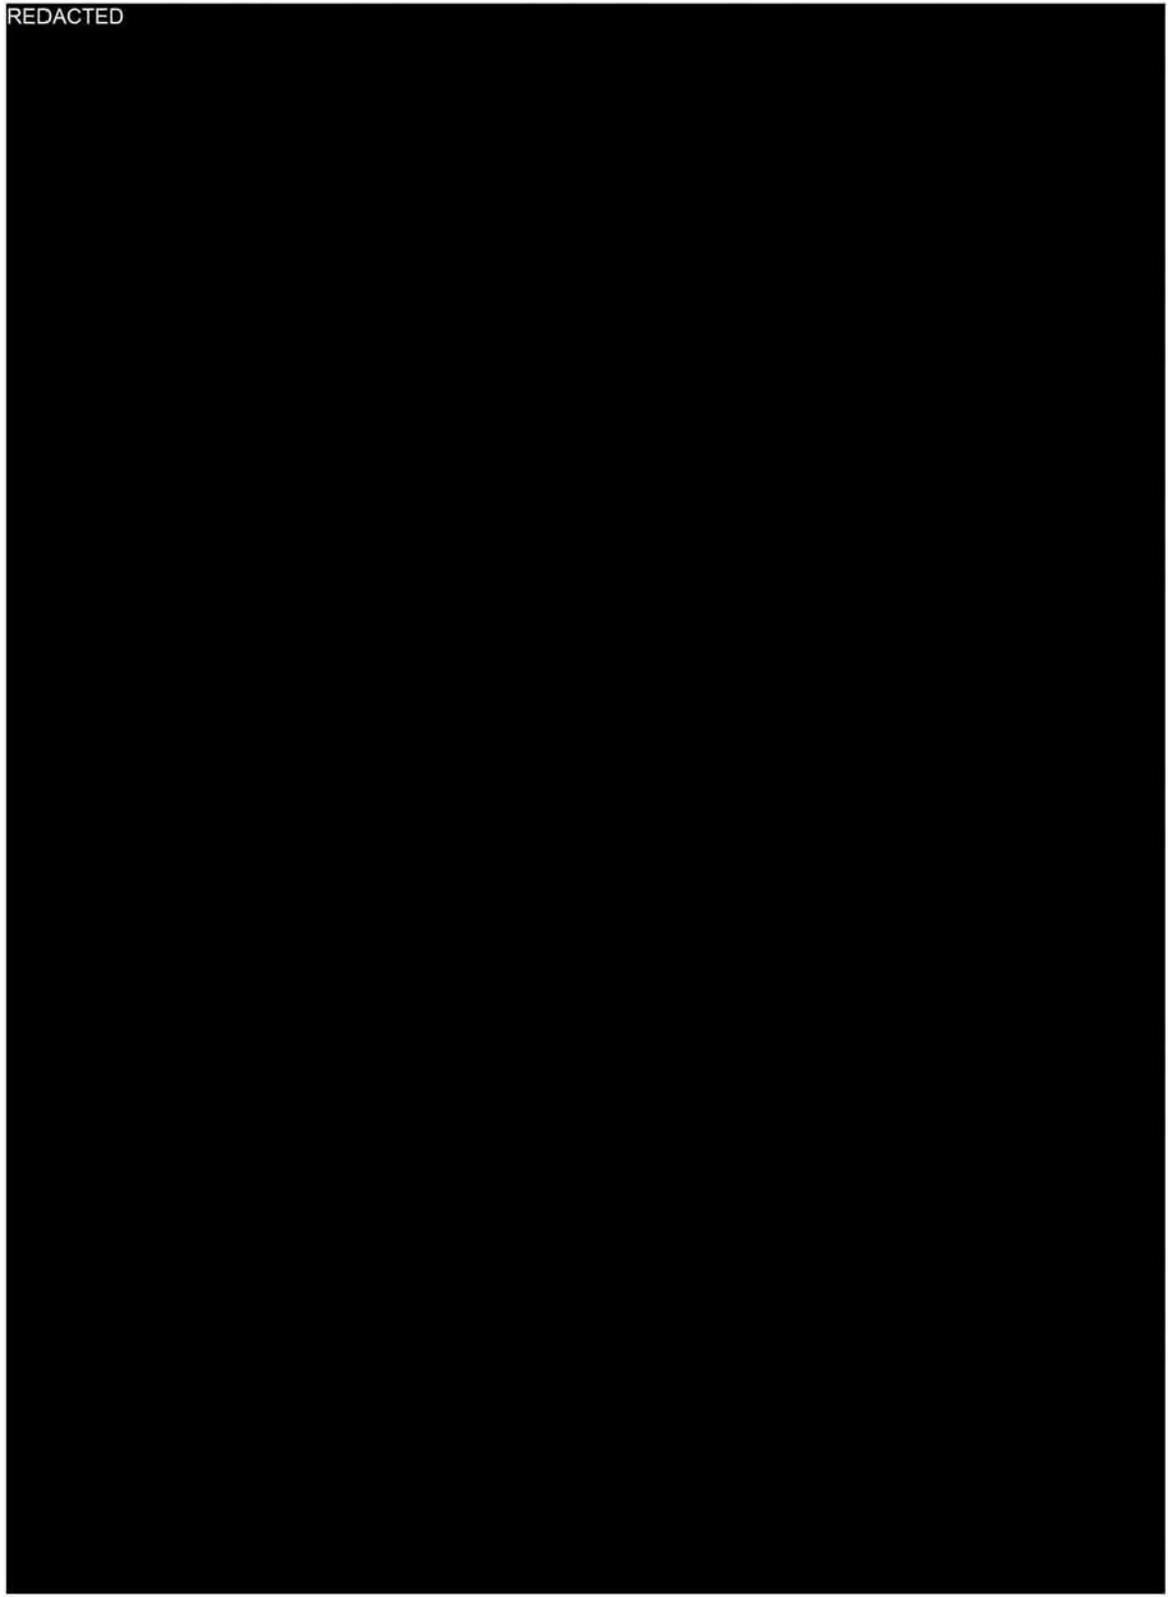

"Before you went to Mortlake you went to The National Pastoral Institute?"

"I took a year off and one of the reasons I took a year off was I knew my life was all screwed up and I appreciated or I thought that I had worked out for myself that part of my problem was that I couldn't mix comfortably and relate comfortably with adults, so I thought if I could go to some kind of a program or course and spend a year a live in year with adults I might be able to sort of help myself that way. But it was only partially successful."

REDACTED

REDACTED

"What happened at Mortlake?"

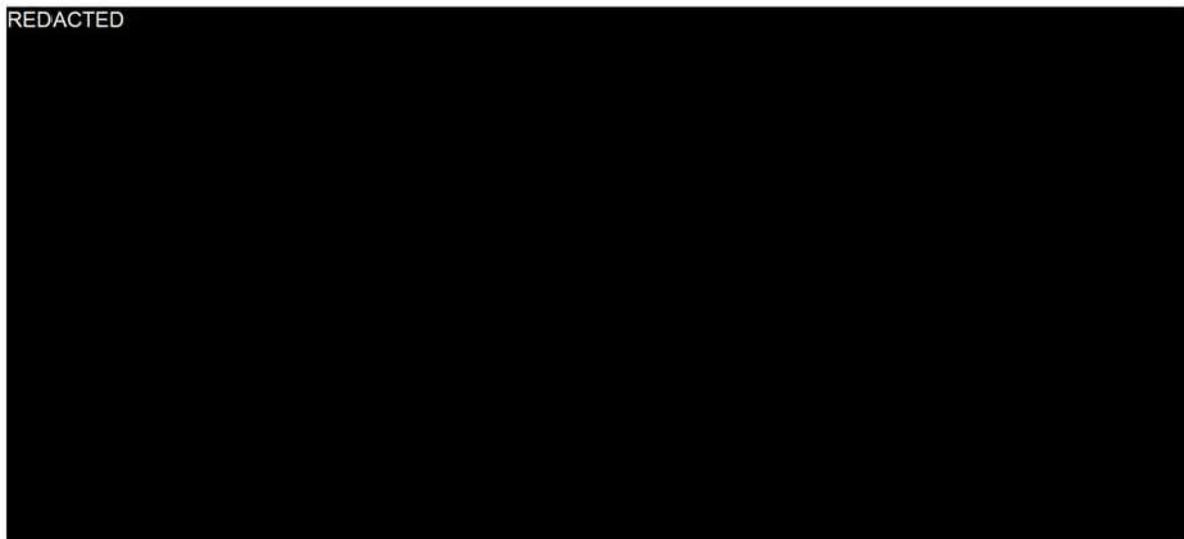

"I got out of control again. I went haywire there. Altar boys mainly. They came over to the presbytery."

REDACTED

"It was no secret around Mortlake eventually about me and my behaviour; there was talk all around the place. Amongst the children and one lot of parents came to me."

REDACTED

"Did you often have them staying over night?"

REDACTED

They came to me and we talked about it and I think they went away and I just forget what the conversation was or how it ended, but we parted I thought on fairly friendly terms. I felt it was more of a forgiving kind of attitude."

"I think, but I am relying on my memory, that they would it handle it "in family" and they felt they were getting along alright. Anyone else come to you?"

"The first time that I knew that there were problems, was when I think it was Hank called in one day that the Bishop had asked him to call and say there were rumours and people were talking and people were going to the Bishop. But there was one particular family who were all in favour of me staying there and they said they think we can handle all this stuff in the community and they fact got me in the car and took me out to the Bishop and sat there and talked to him about that kind of thing and he said "Oh no he has to go he can't stay in the parish".

REDACTED