Dear Ms Dixon,

Re: [REDACTED] DOB: ??/?/1979

[REDACTED] has been seen at this Clinic twice and, as indicated in our telephone conversation of 15th September, further contact with this service would seem inappropriate.

During both sessions [REDACTED] showed a poor descriptive knowledge of sexual parts but indicated that he did have an interest in both his body and its function. It would seem from his description of the home situation that the family is fairly open in entering the bathroom etc., with [REDACTED] being able to describe quite clearly a visual knowledge of both adult male and female bodies and appearing quite comfortable in discussing same.

The impression gained was that whilst one can acknowledge the concern expressed by the parents of the young lady involved in both of the recent episodes where sexual intercourse is said to have occurred, I would have some hesitancy in being certain that [REDACTED] was the initiator of the activity.

As a result of the intervention it appeared that [REDACTED] understood some of the constraints that should apply to his behaviour and seemed to internalise a feeling that he should not allow himself to be drawn into a similar situation in the future.

Whilst this Centre would be inappropriate for on-going counselling, I would suggest that [REDACTED] become involved in a broad-based sexual education (personal development) course, which should, in its latter stages, incorporate a number of practicalities related to sexual expression.

I realise how difficult this latter item is and what difficulties it could present within your centre but feel that REDACTED may not be the only person who could gain from such a presentation.

Thanking you for your referral.

Yours faithfully,
