

Hi APB

It is Shishy, writing to you from my little house in northern NSW. I have had this letter written on my computer for many years and finally will send it.

I have been going through a horrible Family Court scenario in recent years. I didn't choose a very good man to have children with. I think my first experience with Akhandananda did me no favours.

In the course of this ghastly situation I have thought back to the Ashram scene many times. It has never left me but rather has travelled with me in some form ever since.

I never really knew if Akhandananda tried it on with you or not and I don't need to know, however, I just really wanted to say how sorry I am for not speaking up sooner and for any way I may have hurt you by trying to be a "good" disciple, or via any of my actions or non actions. I never meant to hurt anyone, ever.

The sorrow about it all has not diminished over the years and it has all come up in my face again lately and I got to thinking about you all as I do from time to time. Along with that I have had to do my own deep process around all of it and somehow find how it all fits for me into my greater understanding of life, the universe etc., (and other "small" topics such as those :-)

I am sure you are leading the most amazing life to match your amazing self.

I wish you many blessings and once again say that I am truly sorry.
