Police are investigating reports two children were indecently assaulted at a childcare centre in southern Sydney.

Police said they were interviewing a 26-year-old man about the alleged assaults against the children, aged seven and eight, at a centre run by a Caringbah-based community organisation.

The alleged indecent assaults were reported on September 30 and October 10, and detectives from the Kogarah Joint Investigation Response Team and Community Services officers were speaking to the children, police said.

The man has been suspended from work, police added.

Police urged parents or carers with concerns of serious risk of harm to their children to contact the Child Protection Helpline on 132 111.
