Second former Scots teacher arrested

19th December 2008

By JEREMY SOLLARS

DETECTIVES from the Warwick Child Protection and Investigation Unit this week arrested a 76-year-old former teacher at Scots PGC College in Warwick after sex abuse complaints were made against him.

The 76-year-old from Logan City near Brisbane, who cannot be named, is the second ex-teacher from the elite private school to be charged in relation to alleged sexual abuse which took place in early 1970s.

He was arrested on Wednesday after a search warrant was executed on his residence and he was taken to the Brisbane Watchhouse where he was charged with 12 separate counts before being taken into custody.

A police spokesman said the man made no admissions in relation to the charges of indecent assault and indecent treatment.

Three complainants who have made the allegations include former male and female students of the college who also cannot be identified.

The man appeared in the Brisbane Magistrates Court yesterday morning where the charges were heard and he was released on bail with a condition that he reside at his Logan City address, to re-appear on February 16.

He is the second former Scots PGC College teacher from the same era to be charged over alleged sex abuse, with a 63-year-old Brisbane man already having appeared in court in Warwick and Brisbane on charges relating to numerous complaints of indecent treatment made by former male students.

The third individual caught up in the scandal is former fundraising officer from the mid 1990s John Caulfield, who fled to Thailand after complaints were made about his conduct towards young boys at the school.

Mr Caulfield told the Daily News in October he planned to return to Australia in November to clear his name but has not yet surfaced.

His mobile phone appears to have been disconnected.
