Good afternoon W

After the events of this afternoon, YB entering my place of employment with the specific agenda of looking for me and to have a verbal confrontation, RE and I have decided that we would like to take up the offer of me seeing a counsellor.

Add this to the first incident with WY which I wrote to about, and I find myself not wanting to be at reception and feel like a "sitting duck" for any person wishing to vent their opinion at me. I am trying really hard to remain professional and pride myself on how I have handled things so far but I can feel it wearing me down.

I am so angry, as I am sick of hearing about "protecting the students" and then these mothers come to public places to air their opinions and anger of the court case and me. I am more than tired of hearing that I don't know how I would react as it hasn't happened to my son. What I do know is I am a mother and I am working my backside off to protect my son. I am trying to protect him from finding out who the students are because as you know W, he too has very strong feelings, remember he met with you last year and you were fearful he was another victim. I don't want him to ever know who they are but I am fighting against mothers who are supposedly protecting their children???

The School has never identified the students to us and so do I have to keep looking over my shoulder for the next one to front up?

I am sure it's not necessary, but as I haven't managed to speak to you personally, I will reiterate that I have done nothing wrong. I was asked how I found YJ. How my son found him when in his class. And that is the truth for us. When I was asked to go to court I told them that we were told that "we needed to be seen to be unbiased and to let the justice system do it's job". Part of that "job" is the fact that there is a defence, so some of the staff were summonsed. I answered truthfully and honestly. The jury found him guilty and he has been sentenced. This still doesn't change how WE found him.

This not my issue and I am over people trying to make it my issue and especially at my work place.

Please help.
