Hi Sir,

I have spoken with CUO (REDACTED) and she advised me that she has told her parents about the relationship and does not require any psych support from me or the support from a female support officer. I assured her that there are absolutely no adverse inferences or consequences which apply to her due to the relationship.

I have worked with CUO (REDACTED) during a number of 2WG Engineering and Aeromodelling course where she performed Cadet Staff duties. I found her adaptive and very resilient and have no concerns about her psychological well-being. I have provided her with my mobile number should she require any assistance.

I will contact (REDACTED) later this evening and offer any support required.

Regards

Bob

Dear Bob,

Further to my last, the DG has reminded me that we will need to deal with the issue of whether the cadet wants to inform her parents.

Extract from the DG appears below:

Please action as per DG's direction.

All the best

Has the daughter told her parents? Does she want support to do so? Does she not want her parents told?

if the cadet does not want the parents told please discuss with the CDR - the alleged offences occurred when the cadet was under age 17 - if the parents find out later (eg court case) that we failed to tell them they will be very upset. We may need to get the cadet to provide a statement in writing that she does not want her parents told - that would need to be carefully weighed by the counselling/support staff based on status of cadet.
