Hi Daphne

I have just managed to talk with Col Crosby and he had no memory of this at all. He said that he had had access to the buildings, particularly when they were fund-raising but there was nothing that he would have thought resembled a separate small room. He did mention that because the place was so run-down, there were certainly areas of greater dis-repair including the 'pigeon house' where the school was established.

I hope this helps you with your investigation.

Regards
Merrelyn

Hi Merrelyn,

Thanks for this. It may be one of these rooms you mention that this fellow is talking about. However, while we're investigating, it may be helpful to find out what Colin Crosby remembers about a separate small room. So if you could ask him, that would be good. Might be best not to mention the complaint, but that I have an enquiry about Riverview.

I'll look forward to hearing from you.
